Music Library

The Dean's Preface

A note from Dean of the Libraries, Brooke Cox

Once housed in a single room with materials shelved all the way to the ceiling, DePauw's Music Library is a beautiful two story space with spectacular views (particularly in the fall) of campus. While the space is nice, it's the collections and services provided by Sylvia Yang, Music & Performing Arts Librarian, that make DePauw's music library one of the best. If you haven't had a chance to stop in, now may be your chance as the Music Library will become the libraries' main service point for picking up interlibrary loans and other materials after finals in December and through January as library staff move into Roy O. West.

About the Music Library

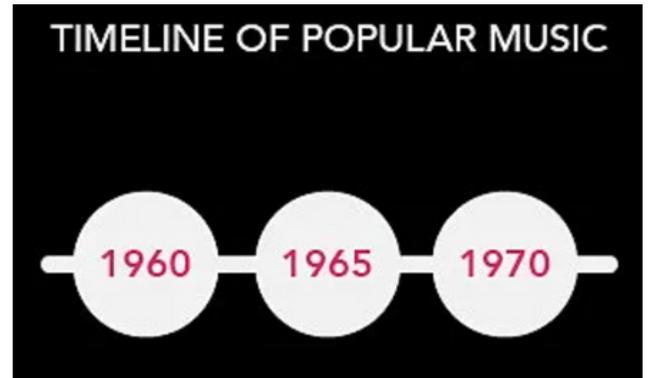

Located at the northwest entrance of the Green Center for Performing Arts, the Music Library houses two classrooms, several individual listening rooms, and the Music Instructional Technology Center (mitc) lab. In addition to books about music, the collection includes scores, periodicals, and media resources.

Meet Lynn Hohenstein

Music Library Manager

Lynn originally hails from the North Eastern Corridor but left urban living behind to live the farm life dream with cows and chickens. While she has played her folk harp and bagpipes for her cows, they are emphatically not fond of her lack of skill with the bagpipes. Her husband, however, enjoys listening to her and her daughter play together on piano and violin. Prior to DePauw she was an independent music teacher, creating classes and ensembles for homeschoolers in the Boston area, and now enjoys helping music students in a different capacity at the Music Library.
