American Archives Month

Each October, the archival community celebrates American Archives Month. Preserving and providing access to materials with historical and archival value is at the forefront of what we do. This work enables us to provide research help to a global community. Last year, we reached over 1,200 people wanting to learn more about DePauw's history or the Indiana United Methodist Church.

The Archives accessioned over 255 cubic feet of material, including, but not limited to, papers from the late Ken Bode; departmental records from economics and management, history, education studies and chemistry; Greek life memorabilia, alumni personal and family papers; and records from 105 disaffiliated churches across the state.

Donations and Record Transfers

Consider donating your personal papers or transferring departmental records to the Archives. You can reach us anytime at archives@depauw.edu.

DePauw Spooks and Haunts

It's that time of the year when the Archives fulfills reference requests on the spooks and haunts of East College, the Roy O. West Library, Seller's Cave and more. Have you heard about the library's haunted book? If not, please stop by the Archives Reading Room on the lower level of the Roy O. West Library this month. We'll have it on display and tell the story of Indiana Governor James Whitcomb and his personal library.

Archives Project Highlights

Recently, we partnered with the Office of Sustainability to archive their departmental records and develop an exhibit. Jill Sturm ('26), archives student assistant, began processing the analog and born-digital records for inclusion to the collection. The exhibit is currently on display outside of the Archives until the end of the fall 2023 semester.

Lauren Nguyen ('23), ITAP intern, created eight displays featuring DePauw women in science. The displays can be found in the Julian building on the first floor. This semester, Lauren is developing a virtual walking tour to educate the community about monuments located around East College and within the Holton Memorial Quad. The project should be completed by the end of the fall 2023 semester.
